➤ “What have you learned about the professional interview? Give at least three meaningful insights you have gained after the session.”:

- Miss Kyla’s narrative of how she had to learn a whole new aspect of Automation Learning for her company was a pretty impressive feat, she basically became the sole reason why her company improved drastically, it shows how learning new things should always be welcome to everyone’s agenda. Miss Kyla also mentioned how it is important to pursue life with your hobbies and leisures intact, and I fully agree with her take. Working out, playing games, hanging out with friends, these agendas should be welcome in a healthy lifestyle. Lastly, her insight on never giving up as her message to past self is without a doubt a wonderful shout. No one should find themselves astray in failure, for failure is where growth hides in, it awaits those who seeks it often, and has success as its reward for being pursued.

➤ “What are the things you need to work on because of the professional interview?”:

- Miss Kyla’s advice of building a portfolio as soon as possible is one of the many things I am currently working on, and the fact that we must keep up with the ever-changing trends of the tech world, or the world in general. Building a portfolio isn’t as tricky as it sounds, yet it also really isn’t as easy as some like to think it is, my portfolio currently consists of measly achievements and accomplishments, and some of them have no relevance to my current course, I have only been able to develop 2 Visual Novels, with one of them not even being published yet. My other agendas don’t even match my course, such as passing the AFA course to validate myself for a Private Trainer’s license. I also really appreciate her advice of “staying curious, adaptable, and proactive”, because she couldn’t have said anything better of an advice to us freshmen.

➤ “Are you still certain of your planned career in the future? Has it changed? Why or why not?”:

- As a student part of a Tech “Transferee” block section, I was certainly lost in past career paths before, although those past paths have formed and forged the current me, it is still unfortunate and a shame that I was led astray for even some time. I was supposed to practice the path of Physical Therapy (MPT), it led me to learn so much about Biomechanics and injuries, it ended up letting me set up a freelance career of Personal Training. Another career I wanted to pursue was a career in Creative writing. I have made countless Light novels, short stories, series, and participated in many scriptwriting roundtable discussions with other organizations, but again, I felt lost in those moments, even though I truly enjoyed those skills and careers. Therefore, I decided to put two and two together and pursue Multimedia Computing, in which I get to bring my works to life in Multimedia form, while also enjoying a Healthy lifestyle on the side with my endless knowledge towards Biomechanics and nutrition.

➤ “Cite one important question you want to ask your future self about your job. Why do you want to ask yourself this question?”:

- I really don't know what the future holds, I have no idea if my future job will have any inclination towards my current course career, but going by this hypothetically, let's say that I do end up pursuing growth for my startup company of Visual Novel, one important question I truly want to ask my future self is “Did our wife really end up renting a penguin for our 5th year anniversary?”. This question is all I really need to ask, because it will answer 2 of the most important questions I have in mind. Did I marry my girlfriend, and was she really dedicated to her whole penguin statement towards me? Those two questions being answered alone will be enough for me, in fact, it'll reassure me so much that I wouldn't care about anything else, because I know, with her by my side, whatever I end up doing, wherever I end up going, the only ‘whoever’ I want, is her.
